

Kathleen Kenny

To a morning tree

No longer in summer clothes leaves fold
in preparation for another earthbound fall.
Birds desert for padded evergreens or discuss a move abroad.

In autumn's rise, branches swing creaking limbs, embodying faith and defiance;
the reassurance of rebirth,
the promise of a bountiful return next spring.